To help the government fight the funding of terrorism and money laundering activities, Federal law requires all financial institutions, including mutual funds, to obtain, verify and record information that identifies each person who opens an account.

What this means: When an individual opens an account, we will ask for name, address, date of birth, and other information that will allow us to identify the person. We may also ask for other identifying documents or information.

When an entity such as a corporation, partnership, or trust opens an account, we will ask for the name, principal place of business, tax identification number, and documentation to substantiate the existence of the entity (e.g., certified articles of incorporation for a corporation). We may also ask for additional information including the name, address, social security number and date of birth for any authorized person of the entity.
